

Stay-At-Home Wife

Dear Jackie

I quitted my banking job to get married 4 years ago. I do not have any kids. I would like to know whether my hands are suitable to work or be a stay-at-home wife. Can I go into business and what kind of business is appropriate for me?

Veronica age 49 right-handed

Dear Veronica

I believe you were at the peak of your banking career when you met your husband and to be able to quit a highly successful job to get married means that your husband earns well enough in his profession or business to provide you with the best. So, congratulations you are very blessed that you need not work after your marriage.

There is a sign in your hands that says you are better off having some kind of work yourself, whether you are single or married; or whether you marry a wealthy husband.

Coming from a banking background, you would appreciate the value of money and how it empowers one to gain freedom and independence. You are so used to earning your own money that you would never like to feel that you could not spend money without having to account to anyone.

You like to be able to do as you wish when you wish because you like to maintain your independence, self-esteem and self-respect.

Your hands are more suitable to be engaged with some kind of work and having your own finances.

Yes, you can go into business because business and finance are in your blood. You must prepare yourself to become an entrepreneur by knowing everything about running a business and managing money. With your financial background plus your good communicative skill as well as your market analysis skill, you should be able to sell your product or service in the market.

The kind of business your hands are suitable for will be related to health and wellness.

You can sell products or services related to personal care, beauty, anti-aging, health, nutrition and fitness.

You can look into health food products like essential oil and dietary supplements. You can run a wellness retreat center, spa, juice bar or healthy restaurant. You can become a health or yoga coach and a nutritionist.

You can sell and distribute cosmetic and beauty products such as anti-aging products and weight loss products.

You can also look into franchise opportunity in the senior care sector. There is a great demand for in-home health aids and personal health aids.

Another area you can look into will be the new age business, fine art and jewelry collectibles, wineries and breweries.
